The solution was to move it inside the element. Two more arrests made in fake bomb scare at Turkey's Istanbul airport Published duration 3 May 2016 image copyright AFP image caption The bomb was apparently made to look like a shrapnel bomb Turkish police say they have arrested two more suspects over a fake bomb scare at Istanbul's Ataturk airport, after 15 people were detained for allegedly smuggling explosives and detonators into the country. The alert came after bombs were found in a woman's handbag and on a passenger train in France. The woman's bag contained bomb-making materials, Turkish officials said. It has been described by Turkish officials as the biggest terror plot since the 2007 Istanbul bombings. France said the devices, which were found in the woman's luggage and on a train, were "highly dangerous". The train, which had been due to travel from the northern town of Amiens to the south-western city of Rennes, was forced to reverse its route. While the thwarted operation involved the use of an explosive belt, French authorities believe the woman was planning to detonate a small bomb. The 26-year-old woman was identified as a Turkish national, and she was detained in the French city of Toulouse on Monday. image copyright EPA image caption France's President Francois Hollande says the bombs were "highly dangerous" Turkish authorities say they have raided the apartment of the woman's father in Istanbul. They say he is also a suspect in the investigation and has been taken in for questioning. The two new arrests were made in the southern city of Adana. One of the arrested men was a taxi driver in his 30s, and the other was a restaurant worker in his 20s, according to Turkey's Dogan news agency. France says the bombs were not armed, and that no one else was injured. image copyright Reuters image caption The suspects were detained in Istanbul's Esenyurt district On Tuesday, French Prime Minister Manuel Valls said that intelligence services had foiled 82157476af
